Italian politics, International change and domestic transformation

Overview

Area: International Relations

Dates: July 10 - 21

Course number: IR/PO325

Campus: Milan

Term: Summer 2023

Credits: 6 ECTS

Course Description

Contemporary international processes of change have underlined Italy's sensitiveness to international dynamics and interests, highlighting his nature of political border between Eastern (Russia and China) and Western (the United States) international Great Powers; between Northern (Europe) and Southern regions (the Middle East and North Africa); between developed and developing countries; between 'the decline of the West and the rise of the Rest'. How have contemporary international processes influenced Italian politics? Is international disorder disordering the Italian social and political order? The Italian case highlights, on the one hand, contemporary international issues arising from the process of transition of international power and its related governance structures and, on the other hand, institutions and internal patterns of adaptation and transformation of internal political and social structures.

Upon successful completion of the course, students will have a solid grasp of the basics of Italian political and social structures; they will be familiar with the most important issues in the contemporary Italian debate, and aware of processes of change in its political constituencies, parties and stakeholders, foreign policies, and identities. In addition, they will have a knowledge on how contemporary international and intra-State political and social structures relate to and influence each other.

Course contents

The course is divided into three parts. The first part focuses on the construction of and historical change in Italian political and social structures in relation to the international system and its transformation; the second part focuses on identity, interests, platforms and goals of contemporary Italian political parties; while the third part focuses on the contemporary processes of change, both in Italy's foreign policies and the international system.

Method of teaching

The first part of the course will consist of lectures. In the second and third parts of the course, and depending on the number of students, some sessions will be introduced by a student (or a small group of students) presentation (15-20 minutes), which can be supported by the assigned readings. The issues raised by the presentation and by the essential readings will foster a discussion led by the instructor, which will constitute the bulk of the class. The instructor will then conclude by briefly (10-15 minutes) summarizing the most important points made during the discussion.

Course requirements

- a. Students are expected to regularly attend sessions and to actively take part in debate;
- b. Before each class, students are expected to have read the compulsory readings (and are strongly

Course Evaluation

At Cattolica we highly value student opinions as they are among our most important resources for assessing and improving the quality of teaching.

The course evaluation will be available on the Blackboard two weeks before the end of the course.

Note that you will not be able to view your final grade if you do not submit the survey for the course.

The survey is made of multiple choice questions and open questions. The evaluations will remain anonymous. Professors will receive an average score of each answers (except for the open question).
